Nigerian writers in diaspora read at Sentinel Literature Festival

Included in the this year's edition is the introduction & launching of new books including the Sentinel Annual Literature Anthology

ARTICLE | OCTOBER 28, 2011 - 2:36AM | BY ALKASIMABDULKADIR

The 2011 edition of the Sentinel Literature Festival holds this weekend in London. Nigerian UK based writer Nnorom Azuonye is the host and festival director of the festival -a biennial event organized by the Sentinel Poetry Movement. First held in December 2009, the festival now runs every other October.

In a press release announcing the festival, Azuonye said "The participants and events at the festival have been carefully chosen and structured to excite and engage both writers and fans of literature. The mix of readings, storytelling, performances, lectures, talks, presentation of papers, and interactive sessions means that guests at our festival will not only enjoy fine literature, but will also share ideas, and gain insight into the amazing processes that produce the literary gems that define our time".

Also featured in the events are readings, performances, lectures and talks by writers and musicians including Nengi Ilagha, author of Mantids, Derek Sellen, author of The Arch and its Shadow, Amanda Sington-Williams, author of The Eloquence of Desire, Osita Okagbue, author of Culture and Identity in African and Caribbean Theatre, Andy Willoughby, author of Tough, Miles Cain, author of The Border, Tinashe Mushakavanhu, editor of Sentinel Literary Quarterly, Terence Frisby, author of Kisses on a Postcard, Monica Clarke, author of They call me Hottentot Venus, Peter Olorunisomo, author of A Snake in the King's Palace, Christie Watson, author of Tiny Sunbirds Far Away, Graham Burchell, author of Vermeer's Corner, [N.
